

The preservation of the reproductive health of young people is of great social importance. The state of reproductive health of today's youth will directly affect the demographic processes of the next 10-15 years. How the demographic situation will develop later depends to a large extent on ideas about family and marital relations, sexual behavior, as well as reproductive attitudes of modern youth. In order to preserve reproductive and sexual health at the University, young people are provided, information, life skills training and accessible and friendly medical and social services providing services in the field of sexual and reproductive health and family planning are necessary.

In all faculties and academic groups, measures for the prevention of reproductive and early pregnancy are systematically organized in accordance with the work plan of educational work.
